I sure was fortunate to be sent to this camp when I was shot down and meet up with a bunch of nice fellows like you all. As your countryman it gives me great pleasure to be acquainted with you.

The life here isn't bad, but I hope that this war will end soon so that we'll be able to forget the past and think only of the future.

I do wish that we'll be able to see each other sometime and someplace after all this is over with. Please write to me, Henry. And I hope will be able to cultivate our friendships, still further.
